General public invited to vote for Sharing Care Award winner now through July 12

ATLANTA, June 28, 2022 /PRNewswire/ -- Sharecare (Nasdaq: SHCR), the digital health company that helps people manage all their health in one place, today announced 59 category finalists in the fourth annual Sharecare Awards, held in association with the National Academy of Television Arts & Sciences, New York Chapter, which inspires artistic and technical excellence through the renowned Emmy® Award.

Established to recognize best-in-class productions and programs that promote well-being and embody the spirit of "sharing care," the Sharecare Awards honors productions across 15 categories that represent the diversity of experiences shaping consumers' health and lives today. All entries were reviewed by Sharecare's esteemed Academy of Judges, which is comprised of 15 renowned experts in health and media, and their juries.

"This year's finalists distinguish themselves not only by the excellence of their submissions, but also by the passion and dedication they demonstrate for advancing the health and well-being of others," said Donna Hill Howes, chief nursing officer and senior vice president of corporate partnerships at Sharecare. "As the caliber of participants grows increasingly competitive every year, it's an honor to provide a platform to celebrate these important voices – large and small – who are so fiercely committed to 'sharing care.'"

Each year, the Sharing Care Award is conferred upon the finalist that receives the most votes from the general public. During a two-week voting period beginning today, anyone can vote for their favorite entrant in each category; only one vote may be cast per person, per category each day of the voting period ending Tuesday, July 12, 2022.
